Not illustrated. 1853 Excerpt: ...in the acts of those congresses, seem calculated to prevent such scandal for the future. These acts provide, that diplomatic persons shall be divided into four orders, of which the first only has a representative character. First, Ambassadors, legates, and nuncios. Secondly, Envoys, ministers plenipotentiary, and other diplomatic persons accredited to sovereigns, except ministers resident. Thirdly, Ministers resident. Fourthly, Charges d'affaires accredited to ministers for foreign affairs. These regulations are made with a reservation of the rights of the representatives of the Pope (A). The rank of diplomatic persons is to be determined by the order to which they belong, and the precedence of those who belong to the same order by seniority, according to the dates of their respective notifications of arrival. No distinction is to be allowed either on account of extraordinary missions, or on account of the domestic relations or political alliances of Courts (Z). In the execution of instruments to which more than two states are parties, the order of nomination and signature is to be determined by lot. It was unnecessary to provide for the case of two contracting parties; for by established usage each state is first named, and the signature of its minister stands first, and its own language is employed in the original to be O) Bynk.
